

John Hildreth

John Hildreth is the Assistant Director of the Center For Innovative Teaching and Learning at Radford University in Radford, VA. Originally from Cincinnati, OH, he attended Western Kentucky University (B.A. in English and B.A. in Music) and Radford University (M.A. in Music). After teaching in both the RU music department and multimedia center for a period of years, he assumed his current position in 2009. John has worked in a variety of new media areas including software development, sound and video production, game design, media-rich instructional design and web development. He has presented his work at numerous conferences around the country including SITE, The New Media Consortium, Virginia Working Connections, Virginia Tech Conference on Higher Education Pedagogy, Association of Collegiate Computing Services of Virginia, and has taught digital humanities in the Virginia Governor's School program. He currently resides in Pembroke, VA, and in his spare time plays guitar in the regionally touring contra dance band Dot Dot Dash.

AcademiX 2011